How Baby Finds Mother.

It must be remembered that at its birth the child knows absolutely nothing. Its own mother is no more to it than any one else, and it would just as willingly become the child of any other woman as of its natural mother. On its first feelings of discomfort it begins to cry. Some one comes to its rescue, and it is quieted. As its cries are re-peated again and again, and the same one comes to its relief, that face becomes familiar, and it soon singles it out as the one to whom it must look for solace in all times of need or grief. The baby heart very early goes out to the one who watches over it and at-tends to its wants, and no one is able to fill the position of a mother who does not sufficiently prize her baby's earliest affection to be willing to do the work necessary for winning it --"A Woman's Essay.

Newspapers In Turkey. A peculiar feature in Cttoman journalism is the fact that every publisher is required by law to pay a revenue tax of 2 paras, or one-fifth of a cent, per copy printed each issue. This tax is collected by issuing stamps for the purpose, which are to be pasted on each sheet. like postage stamps, before going to press, and cancelled by the printing running over them. In consequence the unfortunate publisher is forced to pay a tax on waste copies as well as on unsold ones. It is there-fore evident that a daily paper print-ing 10,000 copies is taxed at least $20

DEATH AND A DREAMER. 3 A Vislag of the Night That the Day

Made a Reality. Nobody is better known around San Francisco than Robert Haight a commission merchant on Front street.

"Bob" Haight as he is familiarly styled, went through an experience the other night which in its way is likely to last him a lifetime.

I retired about 11 o'clock," said Mr. Haight, "feeling in my usual good health, without the slightest premonition of what the night was go ng to bring forth. My wife talked to me for a while be ore going to sleep. Her conversation was not of a nature to induce anything in the way of mental anxiety or depression. As far as I remember she was telling me about some lady friend of hers who is plagued with a husband who is ever going security for people, and nine times out of ten has to foot the endorsement. I don't know that this was a direct hint to me to avoid such things or otherwise so presently, after making some remarks on the weakness of men in general, I fell asleep. How long slept before the subsequent vision which I saw before me I cannot tell; but I shall never forget it to my dying day. By that subtic alchemy of mysterious nature I directly found myself at home, beneath my parental roof-tree.

"I was ushered into a medium sized room, in the center of which stood an old-time maple bedstead, in which my father lay dying. The head of the bed was placed against the center of the wall, so that as I stood at the foot I had ample opportunity to see and hear everything which passed around me. My mother, my aunt, a younger brother and a couple of neighbors, who had probably outgrown my memory, were ranged around the bedside.

.The moment I entered the room my father fixed his eyes steadily on me and seemed as if he read my very soul. The veriest thought and action of any importance, both for good or evil in my life, passed in procession before me.

"The cold, steely glitter of 'he eyes of my dying father riveted me to the spot I tried to avert his steady, searching gaze, which caused a cold perspiration to break forth over my whole body. But I found I could neither move nor open my lips to cry out. How long this ordeal lasted I cannot tell. To me It seemed as if ages came and went before the awful spell was broken by the low, measured voice of the dying man.

· In the presence of those around he recounted the principal acts which go to make up the sum of my varied life; now recommending me for my moral strength and again censuring me for any indiscretion which I may possibly have been party to. I tried again and again to avoid that soulpiercing look, but it held me spellbound. I can yet see how those around lowered their heads as the dving man continued his discourse to the end.

"Soon the eyes began to slightly protrude from their sockets, the body gave a couple of convulsive starts the circles of the eyeballs became more marked and distinct, an occasional gleam of unequal vision was ent in the manner in which he tried to still keep looking at me, lower and lower sank the massive head on the pillow, another convulsive shock, a sudden set stare of the eveballs, a smothered sigh, and my father was dead.

"When I awoke I felt as if I had slept for hours on a cake of ice. I arose, turned up the gas, and got a mouthful of whisky. I tried to persuade myself that I had been dreaming, but I could not shake off the feeling, however, that something unusual had happened. My wife called to me: 'Robert, wh don't you come to bed?' But no more bed for me that night.

"Next morning I received a telegram from home: 'Father is dead.'

Emerson's Love for Boston,

In driving with Whittier one day Emerson pointed out a small unpainted house by the roadside and said: "There lives an old Calvinist in that house and she says she prays for me every day. I am glad she does. I pray for myself." "Does thee?" said Whittier; "what does thee pray for, friend Emerson?" "Well." replied Emerson, "when I first open my eyes upon the morning meadows and look out upon the beautiful world, I thank God that I am alive and that I live so near Boston."-Argonaut.
